

The Connecticut Transportation Institute is an educational, research and technology transfer resource for the State of Connecticut.

CTI provides graduate education and research support through the Connecticut Advanced Pavement Laboratory, the Cooperative Highway Research Program and the Center for Transportation and Urban Planning.

Our Technology Transfer Center provides training and related services to state, municipal and private sector employees.

Continuing Education Units Available

Those participants who complete the entire course will be eligible to receive 1.3 Continuing Education Units.

The University of Connecticut's Center for Continuing Studies is approved by the International Association for Continuing Education and Training as an authorized sponsor of CEUs.

See Mary at the completion of the course for more details and an application.

Designing Bicycle and Pedestrian Facilities in Connecticut

A Road Scholar Elective

April 23-24, 2008—Norwalk, CT
May 7-8, 2008—Farmington, CT
May 21-22, 2008—Storrs, CT

All Sessions run from 8:00—4:00

Designing Bicycle and Pedestrian Facilities in Connecticut

This two day seminar will focus on practical design applications for bicycle and pedestrian facilities. It will include topics such as bicycle and pedestrian user characteristics, engineering tools for intersection and sidewalk design as well as multi-use paths, and design standards including access for different physical abilities. Countermeasures to address problem areas will be meshed with the broader issues of connectivity, livability, municipal policies and management considerations.

National, Regional, and Connecticut specific case studies will be used in conjunction with a panel discussion and a field exercise to maximize learning.

Who Should Attend:

This course will benefit Town and City Engineers, engineering staff, Town Planners, planning staff and Directors of Public Works. Regional Planning Organization staff and ConnDOT design and planning staff are also encouraged to attend.
