Course Description:
Increasingly, the American workforce consists of varying age groups and individuals’ differing values, ambitions and outlooks can be traced to the times in which they grew up.

This discussion will provide information on the different generational contexts and discuss how leaders can apply this information to help motivate and get the most out of their employees.

Who Should Attend:
This program is designed for those public works professionals responsible for supervising the work of others.

Directors of Public Works, Highway Superintendents, Foremen and Crew Leaders are encouraged to attend.

The discussion will be framed around the following questions:

- How do the generations’ defining events and value systems connect?
- How do we adapt our communication methods to different age groups?
- How do we motivate employees of all ages?

Please bring questions and be prepared to share your experiences and actively participate in the discussion.

If mailing registration with payment, please be sure to also fax your registration to secure a space. Please direct any questions to Shelly Desjardin at (860) 486-9373.
